Sir Alexander Spoarman, its former From this point, by a most about transition, head was in constant communication with Mr. the learned counsel harked back to the the Soudamore, and acted in a part of this very melade of Lady Tichborne, and proceeded to subject no an ambussador from to the state over again his reasons for apposing that Treasury. The Postoffice had cented to pay she was perfectly sano, and fully able to judge, in with the regularity with which they bad correctly of the Claimant's identity. He supused to pay, and a single question asked of Mr. Soudsmore must have revealed the nath. der ordinary diroumstances he ought dearly to bave perceived what was in progress. - But it appears that during the worst months of the matter Sir Alexander Spearman was almost incapable of business, and he has now resigned. after a long and useful public service, from age andillbealth, and it would therefore be very bard and unjust to apply to him a severe consure. As soon as bie successor, Mr. Rivers Wilson, was appointed, he at once wrote to Mr. Boudamore, and received £170,100 "on account" immediately. But by that time the whole scandal had become notorious.

The authority, for seeing that the Postal Revenue is duly paid by the Post Office is the Treasury, and between it and Mr. feudamore there is a hot and long controversy. At first he contended that the Treasury know all about But this allegation is now asbattentially. withdrawn. On his last examination Mr. Scudemore says, after some observations in his exculpation. "I do not for one moment pretend that I was not bound to give the Treasury an official knowledge of what was going on; I am responsible for the unission." To those who look execfully at the matter the truth is very plain. Mr. Scudamore thought the Treasury knewall about it, and the Treasury had no real identifit. The two parties looked it the matter with different eyes. Mr. Scudamore "being carer about telegraphs, full of telegraphs, and thinking 'ooly of telegraphs," thought that it was notorious that he was extending telegraphs at a great rate, for which there would be a heavy bill to pay, and that the Tremusy knew it like the rest of the world. With his enger mind, be thought it only natural to take the list money which came to hand for this good purpose. But to the Treasury, on the other hand, it was probably inconseivable that on bis own responsibility any one would spend £300,000 contrary to law for any public sorvice. Such excessive zeals is not common: the whole thing is out of the "usual line." So far from being surprised that such a conjecture was not made by the officials of the Treasury, or that an inference was not drawn by them from some dubious words of Mr. Scudamores, we can hardly imagine their consternation when the truth was at last revaled. Even after proof, decolous officials in general could hardly be - brought to credit the real existence of much air ningual outbreak of pure devotion, and as to their supposing it without proof, they would as som have suspected utter lunacy.

This defence does not, of course, include Mr Jrowe, His mind, atuli events, is not warped by the liabits of minor office. But probably this alleged enthusian for the public good would not have seemed very likely to him. And he admits, on another point, that he is to "But you could have hardly remained under the idea that all works since in excess of those mentioned by Mr. Scudamore had been aus-pended ?-- Nor I am straid that, in the multiplicity of affairs, our attention was not irected to that as it ought to have been. ankly adinit that." And this is no doubt the truth. If myone had set himself to think, "Where does Soudamore got his money from? He is plainly extending telegraphs at it vast rate, where does the cash-all come from P" the whole truth would have been disclosed months since; or, rather, the beginnings of the business would have been disclosed, and the main part would never have happened., The real moral is, as we said before, that we much change our idea of the office of Postmaster General. We must consider it not a nominal or somi-neminal office, but a real and laborious one. We do not wish to turn out i Mr. Monsell for what has happened; it would be unjust to do so he only accepted the old China and Japan Marine Institute—Tis. 18 ways and usages which he found; but a Postmaster-General ought to be lurned out for much a matter; if the office were well arranged, he would be so turned out. Lowe and the Treasury are to blame no doubt but if the interior of a great department is emuntially ill-constructed, its working cannot be kept right by a distant office with multifurious business, or a Cabinet Minister who has no special reason to think of this and much reason to think of

SIXTY FOURTH DAY .- 30TH JULY. Yesterday Dr. Kennedy's address made some Hongkong Hotel Company's shares-50 per progress, and the method of its arrangement was revealed. It is, it would seen, intended Info-Chinese Sugar Company-87 per cent to be biographical, and, up to the day on which Roger set sail for Valparaiso, its contents admit of somewhat consise epitome, it being the learned counsel's theory that the young man, Ox London .-if not a downright miscreant, yet had in him, at any rate, the making of as downsight a miscreant as could well be wished. "He has been represented to you," argued the leaned counsel, "in the fulse light of a young man of high moral principles and religious feeling, and, therefore, a man the very reverse of the de- On New York.fendant; and I am consequently compelled to strip this daw of his borrowed feathers." Now we need bardly | 5- UNDERTAKERS, &c., remind our readers that the dates thus fixed upon by Dr. Kenemy are absolutely incompatible with the dates given by the defendant in the course of his cross-examination in Common Pleas; and hence it is that Dr. Kencaly begs, that his olient may not be judged of with mathematical exactness, and urges that with regard to all dates his memory is a blank. By way of strengthening his point, the learnedcounsel referred to Roger's letter to Gosford, written on the 11th of Febrnary, 1853, in which he says, "I heard from Lady Doughty some time ago. She gave me II OUSE, SHIP. AND STEAMBOAT but little news. You may as well give up your bet." Dr. Kenealy went on to argue that Gosfordwasprivy to a most bideous secret, and had a bet with Roger upon its probable sue. This suggestion provoked a sharp discussion, in the course of which Dr. Kenealy bitterly complained that the prosecution had denied him even the most limited assistance, and that he had not so much as a copy of the Attorney-General's speech. Mr. Hawkins, however, on the part of the Treasury, met the complaint with a direct denial, declaring that the Crown lad given at her, will proceed to Southampton via the Sack following facts are submitted for consideration, merously patronized by the Foreign Merchants the assistance that could be reasonably expected (anal. of it; while Mr. Justice Mellor observed that he had hedrd coin plaints reiterated day by day against the presention until he was weary of them. Mallers being the pleasantly arranged, the learned counsel went on to ask why Jules Barrant had not been put into the witness box .- and to argue that the defendant had told Mr. Gibbesa story about a mule falling over a precipies, which was known to Ros ger Tichborne, but which could not possibly have been known, to Arthur Orton. Allusion was then made to a witness, whose name was not mentioned, who is to prove that he met Roger Tichhorne at Rieshortly before his embar. kation on the Bella, and that Roger had a brown mark on his side. Then came the story of the abipworck, out of which, by holding it up in the light of an improved "permy dreadful, Tithant & Flas INSUITA NUE COM PAN Mr. Hawkins made such a vast amount of fun. The Court will, after its sitting of to-day, abjourn until Tuesday morning. One of the jutors is seriously unwell, and has been warned by his medical man that rest is absolutely esential to him. This request for an adjournminf-very patiently preferred-was promptly welcomed by the Court, and led to some little discussion as to the probable length of time for which the trip is likely to continue. Mr. Hawkins, on the mention of an adjournment, shook his bead sadly, declaring that he, for his part, would rather go on. . The Lord Chief Instice observed that, in any .coe care must be taken to get the trial over before the first day of next term, this 3rd of November. The suggestion was, however, received with ironical laughter. It bloomed above the music of a rill. And wondered at its dainty image there; .. The breezes wandered at their own sweet will

Amid its petalu fuir. Until one day a Zephyr from the west Laden with sweets from newly-blossomed Detached one silky petal from the rest,

In its caressing play. Downwards it sailed, towards a tiny creek, But ere it kissed the stream-on snowy wing A Dove glanced by, and caught with gentle beak The fair and fragile thing.

It bore the petal to a lady's bower Amid the vines and myrtles of the South; And as she slumbered, softly dropped the flower On Beauty's scarlet mouth.

A snow-flike on a rose, that petal lay A moment on her lips—then come a sigh Whose faint breath above the happy leaf away, Ains! too soon to die.

Upborne by zophyrs cool with evening dew, It fluttered through the arbour's trellised Into the night—then vanished from the view Amid the deepaning gloom.

Thus the beight hopes that blossom in the hear Of happy childhood, ever, one by one Centre in some new joy, and then depart Like yonder dying sun.

A QUEER DINNER.

Another "aneclote" has fortunately been left out of Colonel Forney's delightful book Once upon a time one of those giant intellects of a past generation gave a large dinner party at one of the fashiouable botels at the A private table had been set in one of the parlours, the hour of the feast had arrived, the guests were assembled, the dinner was perfect, but astonishment reigned supreme, for the rost himself was nowhere to be found. Among the guests might have been seen the pajestic forms of Cass and Benton. Massachusetts was represented by the immortal Webster, whilst the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvenia had contributed her most distinguished son in the person of James Buchanan. Forest was there enveloped in the rosy rave of his dawning fame, whilst the author-of the "Auecdotes of Public Men " might have been mistaken for a youthful Apollo, or some other equally faultless heathen god. A vessel with crowded sails at sea without a commander, a balloon in the upper stratum without Professor Wise in the basket, the political ring in Pennsylvania without Simon Cameron, could only represent the situation; but James Buchanau, with his superb grace and inimitable tact, managed the social ship while it was in the midst of the breakers. "Gentlemen," said the lordly Buchanan, " we are bidden here to partake of this fine dinner. The wine is cool-all things seem ready. is true the host is absent. but that is no reason why so good a feast should spoil. Be seated, friends Life is brief! Let us en-Apician days bubbled, sparkled and disappeared. The air was heavily charged with the electricity of genius; yet in the absence · of the host all was serene. At last the hour of departure came. It was eleven o'clock. - The door opened, and there stood the host Angels and ministers of grace defend us! His battered hat sat jauntily on one side of his handsome head. His sharp, white teeth still clung to the fragments of a fast disappearing cigar. "Gentlemen," he begin "I've been to Georgetown, hic !" . Said Mr. Buchanan to some of the more youthful of the company: "Take this man to his room: he might say something he would regret," and so the host was led without opposition away. Next day, when explanations and apologies were duly sent forth, they were received in the kindest spirit, because Mr. Buchanan had paved the way for them the night before, by saying to the company, "Our host has been unfortunate. ORIGIN OF "OLD TOM."

The question raised in the Mirror as to why gin should be called "Old Tom" by the publicans and the lower orders of London, has been taken up by Mr. Walter Thornbury in Notes and Queries. The real solution of the difficulty is, he thinks, to be found in the following extract from a curious and rare book, The Life and Adventures of Captain Dudley Bradstreet, 1755, a Government spy during the '45, and a disreputable adventurer of the Count Fathom | surers.

"At this time the selling of Geneva in a less quantity than two gallons was prohibited by Act of Parliament, and whoever presumed to do it must pay ten pounds to the Informer, or be confined two months in prison and there whipt. Most of the gaols were full on account of this Act, and the numbers of people every day dragged to one prison or other for transgressing this Law.

"The mob being very noisy and clamorous for want of their beloved liquor, which few or none at last dured to sell, it soon occurred to me to venture upon that trade. I bought the Act, and read it over several times, and I found no authority by it to break open doors, and that the informer must know the name of the person who rented the house it was sold in. To evade this I got an aquaintance to rent a house in Blue Anchor Alley, in St. Luke's Parish, who privately conveyed his bargain to me; I then got it well secured, and laid out in a bed and other furniture five pounds, in provision and drink that would keep about two pounds, and purchased in Moorfields the sign of a cat and had it nailed to a street window: then caused a leaden pipe, the small end out an inch, to be placed under the paw of the cat; the end that was within had a funnel

"When my house was ready for business, I inquired what distiller in London was most famous for good gin, and was assured by soveral that it was Mr. I -- dale in Holborn. To him I went and laid out thirteen pounds, which was all the money I had, except two shillings, and told him my scheme, which he approved of. . This cargo was sent off to my house, at the back of which there was a way to go in or out. When the THE GLOBE MARINE INSURANCE "liquor was properly disposed, I got a person to inform a few of the mob that gin would THE OOSTERLING SEA AND FIRE IN. be sold by the Cat at my window next day, provided they put the money in his mouth from whence there was a hole that conveyed THE SAMARANG SEA AND FIRE INSUit to me. At night I took possession of my den, and got up early next morning to bo ready for custom; it was nearly three hours before anybody called, which made me almost despair of the project; at last I heard the chink of money, and a comfortable 15 per cent. voice say ' Puss, give me two pennyworth of gin." finstantly put my mouth to the tube, and bid them receive it from the pipe under per cent on their paid up Capital, distribute 25 Policies issued for long or short periods at her paw, and then measured and poured it per cent of the surplus of the profits pro rate current rates. into the funnel, from whence they soon re-· ceived it. Mrz at current rates. Disraeli is perhaps a sportsman at heart, and, the best description of the Derby that has even been written-the classical and historical description-is that from his pen. But Mr. Disraeli is only a sportsman as most of the rest of us are sportsmen, in his love of sport, of horses, and of the genial and healthy excitement of the turf. And Mr. Gladstone is not even this. If the Premier can distinguish a race-horse from a hunter, or a hunter from a cob, it is all that he can do ; and what the Premier is the rest of the Ministry are and must be, I take it, now, if ruley are to play their parts well in Parliament and in the work of administration in Whitehall. The Marquis of Hartington may perhaps be able to spare time from the work upon the Dorby or the St. Leger; but if the Current Rates. experience of Lord Derby, Lord Palmerston, or even of Lord George Bentinck is worth anything, the man who enters into politics as a science—enters into it. that is, heart and soul-must think of no books but blue books, and of no horses but his hunters and his park cob. - Gentleman's Magazine.
